

How To Spot An Up-And-Coming Neighbourhood – Jun2016

Posted on May 24, 2016 | by Mark McLean in Condo Market

Share this

 Facebook

 Twitter

 Google

 Email

Real Insight

Everyone wants to live in a great neighbourhood, one that is safe, convenient, beautiful and brimming with the cool factor.

But what if you're priced out of buying a home in the perfect neighbourhood? Finding an affordable home in the next great 'hood may just be the next best thing.

Geographic boundaries and the mix of housing types have changed over time, but in the long-term the message is clear: making the move to homeownership, regardless of where in the GTA you choose to call home, has been rewarding for many.

Interested in exploring your options?

There are plenty of up-and-coming neighbourhoods in the Greater Toronto Area, and I'd like to share some tips on how to spot them.

Location, location, location

A neighbourhood that may appear less than ideal, but is adjacent to other desirable neighbourhoods, will eventually benefit from an outward cycle of development. Similarly, a less populated neighbourhood that is on a main transit line or close to a major highway will eventually start to see development, and attract new residents, sparking improvements for the neighbourhood.

Retail investment

If you suddenly see a trendy coffee shop or organic grocery store or delectable artisanal cheese shop open up in an otherwise undesirable neighbourhood, there's a good chance that change is in store. Major retail chains typically do a sizable amount of research to ensure a neighbourhood is stable before they decide to plant roots, so you'll feel more comfortable planting your roots there as well.

On the mend

Government spending on neighbourhood infrastructure and homeowners' investment in renovations are sure signs a neighbourhood is on the rise. A new park or freshly paved roads could indicate the beginning of a trend, as does a new level of curb appeal.

Going, going, gone!

Are the number of "Days on Market" in the neighbourhood on the decline? Chances are that the neighbourhood is in demand and buyers are taking notice. To determine the average days on the market in your prospective neighbourhood, talk to a realtor.

Demography has it

Spot a neighbourhood with a lot of young people, artists and musicians? These groups tend to lead the way when it comes to establishing neighbourhood credibility; they move where the rent is cheap and import oodles of coolness. It won't be long until the aforementioned artisanal cheese shop shows up along with a huge wave of neighbourhood envy. Get in while you can.

Charmed, I'm sure

Find a neighbourhood with plenty of Victorian homes or midcentury moderns just itching for a renovation? Chances are these homes will get their renos soon, so jump on your chance to snag that beautiful Tudor before someone else sees its charm. Bonus points for neighbourhoods that were previously centres of industry.

So, as you see, there are lots of ways to spot a neighbourhood with serious potential. Just remember, buying in an up-and-coming neighbourhood takes long-term vision, as it could be years before your new 'hood really takes off and prices start to appreciate. Regardless, homeownership is a great long-term investment and I hope these tips help you on your search for the perfect home. Good luck!

MARK MCLEAN is president of the Toronto Real Estate Board, a professional association that represents 39,000 realtors in the Greater Toronto Area. Write to Mark to share your thoughts and questions at trebpres@trebnet.com.